UK University Index

UK University Index

The UK University Index (2023) is designed for counselors, study abroad advisors, educational consultants and those who work closely with US students interested in studying a degree in the UK as part of their educational journey.

This index will give you access to information about universities across the UK, allowing you to get a clear picture of each institution, its characteristics and aims to help you to narrow down options that fit your student's profile.

We hope that you find this index useful in your day-to-day work and look forward to hearing from your student's experience in the UK.

Information and data included on this material has been provided by universities and are correct at the time of publication. We encourage you to contact universities for the most up-to-date information.

Types of Universities

There are different types of university and higher education institutions that you can find in the UK. Understanding them will help you consider what your student is looking for as part of their university experience.

1. Traditional universities

Traditional universities are often the largest and have the longest histories. They are usually located in cities, and many have higher entry requirements than other institutions. They have long-standing reputations for academic research, and many of the prestigious Russell Group universities fall into this category.

2. Metropolitan universities

Metropolitan universities are the modern accompaniment to traditional universities. Many of these institutions were established in the 1990s.

Metropolitan universities often offer a wider variety of courses than traditional universities with more options for you to choose from: such as gaming and events management or more niche course options in subject areas such as business and finance.

They may have lower entry tariffs than traditional universities, but this will depend on the specific university and course.

3. Specialist universities

Specialist universities focus on a particular subject area such as science, law, agriculture, music, dance, art or drama. Some of these institutions are referred to as 'conservatoires' or 'academies'.

4. Campus universities

Campus universities may be located on the outskirts of cities or smaller towns, but there are also plenty of campus universities in cities too. This category of university can also contain either traditional or metropolitan universities, as what is classified as a campus university is all about the set-up. Campus universities concentrate all of their facilities - including accommodation - in one place, unlike other universities where these may be spread out across a city or particular geography.
